

From: Daniel Journo

Date: Sunday, April 15, 2018 at 12:11

To: "gdpr@icann.org"

Subject: [Ext] GDPR Input

Hi,

In the UK, you cannot register a LTD company without publishing personal information on the directors. This protects the public. It allows people to research a company and its directors to decide whether they are trustworthy. Therefore it is the law that the information is publicly available, regardless of GDPR.

Under that legal principle, why should one be able to register a domain without publishing their personal details within Whois? IE. If publishing details of Directors is to protect the public and allow them to research a company, why should we not also publish domain registrants allow the public to do the same?

Kind regards

Dan Journo